THE GLOBAL ACHIEVEMENT GAP

The 'problem' is, simply, that the future of our economy, the strength of our democracy, and perhaps even the health of the planet's ecosystems depend on educating future generations in ways very different from how many of us were schooled.

In today's highly competitive global knowledge economy, all students need new skills for college, careers and citizenship. To fail to give all students these new skills leaves today's youth-and our country- at an alarming competitive disadvantage.

Schools haven't changed; the world has - and so our schools are not failing - they are obsolete - even the ones that score the best on standardized tests - which is a very different problem requiring an altogether different solution.
